 I've sent a pre-pub review package to them as well.

The normal process for nonfiction is to submit a proposal to an agent or editor, and if you get a contract, write the book. I am doing just the opposite because I want a body of approved text before I start contacting potential publishers. At this stage, I have no leads on an agent or editor, though I am forming a contact plan.

I've documented large portions of this work in the end notes. I'll send those to you electronically for easy access to the URLs. These are publicly available sources, the primary one of which is  I've taken great care not to discuss "sources or methods," or any sensitive material and hope that you come to a similar conclusion.

I hope your weekend was good. I have a few more items for you to review for disclosure. These are very similar to the book proposal I sent earlier and you approved (thank you) These are essentially lesson plans for teaching the content of the book to outside organizations. I have outside employment authorization already, but just wanted to check all the blocks by having you review as well.

Thanks again

Hi Darren,

If your submission is unclassified, the easiest way to get it to us is via unet e-mail. [redacted]

b7E -4

Just send us your submission that way. We have a 30 working day review policy, which means we generally have things done in that time frame, but this may be extended for lengthy or complex cases. If you could also include a good mailing address as we are required to mail final correspondence.

Hope this helps. Feel free to contact me with any further questions.
